

Asian Americans & Pacific Islanders

THE TOP FIVE THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT THE AFFORDABLE CARE ACT

The Affordable Care Act – the new health care law – gives hard working, middle-class families the security they deserve. The Affordable Care Act forces insurance companies to play by the rules, prohibiting them from dropping your coverage if you get sick, billing you into bankruptcy through annual or lifetime limits, and, soon, discriminating against anyone with a pre-existing condition. Signed into law by President Obama in March 2010, the Affordable Care Act will remove obstacles to care that many Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders historically have faced and ensure that they will have better access to stable, affordable health insurance and high quality health care suited to their needs. All Americans will have the security of knowing that they don't have to worry about losing coverage if they change jobs. And insurance companies are required to cover preventive care like mammograms and other cancer screenings.

Here are five ways the Affordable Care Act helps you:

1. Ban on discrimination based on pre-existing conditions. It is illegal for insurance companies to deny coverage to children because of a pre-existing condition, such as cancer, asthma, or diabetes. In 2014, insurers are banned from discriminating against anyone with a pre-existing condition. Already, qualifying Americans who are uninsured due to a pre-existing health condition have access to affordable insurance through Pre-Existing Condition Insurance Plans. This is important because, for example, in Hawai'i, adult Asians, Native Hawaiians and other Pacific

Islanders have high rates of diabetes.

2. No lifetime dollar limits on claims.

The new health law ends lifetime dollar limits on essential benefits and restricts annual dollar limits until they are phased out in 2014. Approximately 5.5 million Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders are now free from having to worry about going without comprehensive treatment for cancer and other chronic diseases because of lifetime dollar limits.

3. Free preventive services to help you stay healthy or prevent a condition from getting worse.

Under the new health care law, all Americans joining a new health care plan must be able to receive recommended preventive services, such as mammograms and screenings for other cancers, diabetes, and blood pressure, with no deductibles or co-pays. Now, 2.7 million Asian Americans have coverage for preventive services without additional cost-sharing. Expanding access to preventive care can reduce health disparities for 16 million Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders by helping to prevent many diseases that have a disproportionate impact on these Americans.

4. Increased health security for seniors and people with disabilities.

Under the new law, seniors and people with disabilities can receive recommended preventive services such as vaccines, diabetes screenings, and an annual wellness visit with their doctor to discuss their health concerns free of charge. More than 32.5 million people with Medicare, including more than 500,000 Asian Americans, have already received one or more free preventive services. The new law also provides relief for people in the Medicare "donut hole," the prescription drug coverage gap. More than 5 million people with Medicare have saved an average of $635 because the law requires a 50 percent discount on covered brand name prescription drugs in the donut hole. The donut hole is closed in 2020 under the health care law.

5. Access to affordable coverage for all Americans.

Insurance companies must now allow young adults up to age 26 without employer-provided health coverage to remain on their parents' plans. This means that over 2.5 million young adults have gained coverage, including 97,000 Asian Americans. Beginning in 2014, millions more will gain access to affordable, high-quality health care through the expansion of Medicaid and the establishment of Affordable Insurance Exchanges, new competitive marketplaces where many people will be able to purchase subsidized coverage. And the new law is providing support for community health centers that provide care without regard to the ability to pay, and to increase the number of health care providers and develop a more diverse health care workforce.
